Women in Engineering (WIE) is a college-wide program dedicated to providing a welcoming and supportive environment for female students in engineering disciplines. We are here to help you transition to Illinois and continue on a successful path throughout your time with us.

“The WIE office has been a fantastic source of support throughout my college career. The staff is knowledgeable and warm hearted, capable of answering my questions or connecting me to other resources. My success at the University of Illinois is in large part to the help of these wonderful advisors!” —Emily Turner, General Engineering

What the Women In Engineering Program Provides:
- Student workshops and Professional and leadership skills seminars
- Undergraduate advising
- New student orientation
- Residential summer camp for high school girls
- Community, collaboration, and mentorship

Women’s Student Organizations:
Additionally, there are many opportunities for you to get involved with other students in engineering and WIE will help you find ones that best suit your interests. These include the Society of Women Engineers (SWE) and other organizations that support women in various engineering majors and provide a large variety of leadership and involvement options.

There is no limit to what you can do in Engineering at Illinois.
